Working Holiday — Let's Talk

Nothing is decided today. Same shape as always: say it, add one thing, how you feel.

WHAT I FOUND · just for reference

Why people go English in real life · living on their own · a break before the next job.

What they say after The year changed them more than it changed their résumé.

What you told me It has to count for your career. Not a wasted year.

TOPIC 1 · WHY PEOPLE GO

What would you want to get out of a year abroad?

1. I'd want to ___.
   use English every day · live on my own · take a break before the next job

2. For me, the main thing is ___.
   the experience · my English · becoming more independent

3. I think it'd be ___.
   worth it · scary but exciting · a big step

EXAMPLE I'd want to use English every day. For me, the main thing is becoming more independent. I think it'd be scary but exciting.

HONG SAYS

I'd want to use English every day and live on my own. For me, the main thing is to improve my English. I think it'd be exciting not scary.

Australia · 417 Koreans up to 35 (from July 2026). Visa about AUD 840, show AUD 5,000. Max 6 months with one employer. One year.

UK · Youth Mobility Ages 18–35. 5,000 places a year for Koreans, no ballot. Two years. £340 + £776 health fee a year. £2,530 in the bank.

The feel of it Australia: sun, casual work, far away. UK: London, two years, higher costs.

TOPIC 2 · AUSTRALIA OR THE UK

Which one would suit you better right now?

1. I'd probably go with ___.
   Australia · the UK · I'm not sure yet

2. The main reason is ___.
   two years · the distance from home · the cost · the weather

3. But I'm a bit worried about ___.
   the money · being far away · finding a job

EXAMPLE I'd probably go with the UK. The main reason is two years. But I'm a bit worried about the cost.

HONG SAYS

I'd probably go with the UK. But the accent is too difficult. So to think realistically, I'd go to Australia.
The main reason to choose the UK is to improve my English.
Because UK accent is more difficult, I can practice more.
The main reason to choose Australia is just a bit more familiar.
But I'm a bit worried about finding a job and the money.

WHAT I FOUND · just for reference

Airport jobs that take this visa Ground handlers like Menzies and dnata hire casual check-in and boarding staff.

Jobs that don't Cabin crew needs full work rights — not open on a one-year visa.

What counts later Airlines ask for about a year of customer-facing work. Where it happened matters less than what you did.

TOPIC 3 · WORK THAT COUNTS

What kind of job would actually count for you?

1. A job that counts would be ___.
   airport check-in · ground staff · anything with customers, in English
2. I wouldn't mind ___, as long as ___.
3. The problem with ___ is ___.

EXAMPLE A job that counts would be airport check-in. I wouldn't mind a café job, as long as it's not the whole year. The problem with a Korean-run shop is I'd speak Korean all day.

HONG SAYS

I prefer airport check-in. A job that counts would be airport check-in, ground staff.
Customer-facing / airport or hotel / both
I wouldn’t mind to work at airport or hotel as long as it is customer-facing.

WHAT I FOUND · just for reference

Where English gets tested first Finding a room · phone interviews · bank account and tax number · telling a manager something went wrong.

The Korean-speaking backup Korean cafés, travel agencies, Korean-speaking airport roles. A backup, not a must.

What people regret Spending the first months only with other Koreans. The English doesn't come on its own.

TOPIC 4 · BEING READY

What would you want to be able to do in English before you go?

1. Before I go, I'd want to be able to ___.
   find a flat on my own · do a phone interview · explain a problem to a manager

2. I could start by ___.

3. The thing I'd worry about most is ___.

EXAMPLE Before I go, I'd want to be able to find a flat on my own. I could start by calling in English once a week. The thing I'd worry about most is my visa status.

HONG SAYS

LAST ONE

So, what are you thinking now?

1. To tell the truth, I'm thinking ___.
2. What I'd like to find out next is ___.
3. Today made me feel ___.

HONG SAYS

To tell the truth, I’m thinking I’m not sure. But I will find available airport jobs in both countries.
What I’d like to find out next is available jobs in both countries. And initial amount to be settled.
